Woodstock School has had a long history of significant contributions from its alumni, who even after decades of leaving their alma mater haven't lost their zest and love for their school. Alumni that graduated as far back as the year 1949 have made significant contributions to help re-develop the hostel building. Around 1.5 million dollars were donated to the school by several former students for this project.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

Being forced to use the existing building structure, each set of rooms has been uniquely designed to reflect the character of our Himalayan setting and the warmth of a home, instead of a standardized institutional look. To achieve this wood was used in different ways for panelling on the walls, and the rafters in the ceilings. 80% of this wood has been salvaged from the old beds, windows and the roof trusses in the earlier Hostel building.

The entire structure was painstakingly tested using ultrasound technology. The building was then strengthened by installing a new steel roof structure (replacing the wooden beams) and by concrete jacketing to strengthen the old columns and beams. Due to the various structural improvements, the Hostel building now meets the design code and can withstand earthquakes up to 6.0 on the Richter scale.

All the furniture in the student rooms is made using sheesham or sal wood which is native to Uttarakhand, and is extremely strong and robust. The wood is expected to last as long as the building itself. All the stone work in the new Hostel is part of the original stone walls that were built in the 1920's. The plaster over these walls was removed to reveal the beauty of the stonework.
